Design & Politics
– 4 thoughts to talk about

Design is a technique/knowledge of power, defined by its (historical) level of privatization

Design can't solve political problems – on the opposite, this illusion leads to the technocracy of today

Mixing up narrow & wide concepts of design legitimizes and supports social engineering

Design suffers inherently from a Cartesian perspective
I know what is good for others

(A critical design theory should focus more on aesthetics & affects rather than normative aspects)
