ours, The King's Three Questions² could probably give us some invaluable direction, if not obvious answers. This is something that good managers in leadership positions could inspire us to do.6 And the time to do all this is now!

Vighnesh Ashok, MD, FRCA

Department of Anaesthesia and Intensive Care Post Graduate Institute of Medical Education and Research Chandigarh, India vighneshmmc@gmail.com

REFERENCES

- 1. Luedi MM. The King's Three Questions: a short story I want my teams to understand. Anesth Analg. 2022;135:896-897.
- 2. Poley DG. The Gospel in Tolstoy: selections from his short stories, spiritual writings, and novels. The Catholic Library World. 2016;86:284.
- 3. Romito BT, Okoro EN, Ringqvist JRB, Goff KL. Burnout and wellness: the anesthesiologist's perspective. Am J Lifestyle Med. 2021;15:118-125.
- 4. Chong MYF, Lin SHX, Lim WY, Ong J, Kam PCA, Sharon GK. Burnout in anaesthesiology residents: a systematic review of its prevalence and stressors. Eur J Anaesth. 2022:39:368-377.
- 5. Milenovic MS, Matejic BR, Simic DM, Luedi MM. Burnout in anesthesiology providers: shedding light on a global problem. Anesth Analg. 2020;130:307-309.
- 6. Rama-Maceiras P, Parente S, Kranke P. Job satisfaction, stress and burnout in anaesthesia: relevant topics for anaesthesiologists and healthcare managers. Eur J Anaesth. 2012;29:311-319.

DOI: 10.1213/ANE.0000000000006317

In Response

Between stimulus and response there is a space. In that space is our power to choose our response. In our response lies our growth and our freedom.

Viktor E. Frankl

ith great pleasure, I read Dr Vighnesh Ashok's letter¹ highlighting 1 aspect of Tolstoy's 3 questions—the questions I want my team to understand.² Dr Ashok's self-care-based interpretation of 1 layer of Tolstoy's short story is the first step in sustained resilience of individuals, teams, and systems.¹

While self-care starts with healthy nutrition, physical exercise, restful sleep, and supportive interpersonal relationships, the concept reaches much further than recharging our biological batteries. It includes meaning- and mindful psychological self-care. In the absence of a personal search for meaning as ultimate level of profound self-care, patient care likely remains an energy-consuming, thus exhausting extrinsic demand.2

Mindfulness develops through the interplay of time and space and can be trained in any situation, no matter how simple, at the very moment at hand.3 Such practice raises awareness that you are not your thoughts and that you are not reliant on your not-conscious behavioral "default mode networks." Finally, this practice nurtures compassionate awareness of oneself and others,4 and thereby to take benevolent responsibility for decisions and relationships alike.⁵

As highlighted by Dr Ashok, the amazing adventure of leadership is not only about managing people and systems but also about practicing profound selfcare.6 As we learn from Viktor Frankl, how we react to any external or internal stimulus is a free choice. By learning to pause upon any trigger, we learn to wait for mindfulness to set in, enabling compassion for ourselves, our patients, our teams, and our health care systems.

Finally, we will be able to understand Taoist philosopher Lao Tzu, who coined the phrase: "true selfinterest teaches selflessness."

Markus M. Luedi, MD, MBA

Department of Anaesthesiology and Pain Medicine Inselspital, Bern University Hospital University of Bern Bern, Switzerland markus.luedi2@insel.ch

REFERENCES

- 1. Ashok V. The King's Three Questions: applying the tenets of Tolstoy in our clinical practice. Anesth Analg. 2023;136:e13-e14.
- 2. Luedi MM. The King's Three Questions: a short story I want my teams to understand. Anesth Analg. 2022;135:896–897.
- 3. Masuno S. The Art of Simple Living: 100 Daily Practices from a Zen Buddhist Monk for a Lifetime of Calm and Joy. Penguin
- 4. Hougaard R, Carter J. Compassionate Leadership: How to Do Hard Things in a Human Way. Harvard Business Press; 2022.
- 5. Rosenberg MB. Practical Spirituality: The Spiritual Basis of Nonviolent Communication. PuddleDancer Press; 2005.
- 6. Luedi MM. Leadership in 2022: a perspective. Best Pract Res Clin Anaesthesiol. 2022;36:229-235.

DOI: 10.1213/ANE.00000000000006318